

International Scientific Committee

RAMON BALIUS MATAS

Editor

A brand new International Scientific Committee has appeared in the magazine's organisation chart together with edition 163 of APUNTS. MEDICINA DE L'ESPORT. The reason behind this Committee is that we want to continue opening ourselves up to the outside world and ensure that it is known that we are a magazine with international appeal. For many years we have targeted Latin America, but we have also targeted countries all over the world. Therefore, it is logical that the list contains a significant proportion of professionals from all over the world.

The members of this International Scientific Committee have been asked to supervise and promote the magazine, leaving the editing and revision to those in the Committee and those of us who speak the habitual languages of APUNTS. Therefore, we ask them to be a part of APUNTS, to get to know the magazine and to advise us.

- We ask them to “be a part” of the magazine because their support compels us to persevere and to do things to the best of our ability and capability. Their presence lends prestige to the magazine.
- We ask them to “get to know the magazine” as they will help us to open ourselves up more to the outside world thus preventing us from falling into the trap of archaic exclusivity. We are relying on them to promote in their respective countries our electronic magazine that was founded in 1964 and provides easy access to all its articles on the internet.
- We ask them to “advise us” because their experience will greatly help us to ensure the quality of the magazine. In fact, it was a few of the members of this new International Scientific Committee who advised us to start gradually translating the articles into English.

*Ladies and gentlemen of the International Scientific Committee:
Welcome to APUNTS!*

Almost spontaneously, it was proposed that we form an International Committee taking advantage of the contacts that many members of the Editorial Board have abroad. From the first day that we decided to go ahead with setting up this International Committee, we closely noted the interest that many of the Committee members today had in our magazine that sometimes resulted in interesting publications from international authors.

Ladies and gentlemen of the International Scientific Committee:
Welcome to APUNTS!